

Five months later CTV apologizes

OTTAWA (CUP)—The CTV television network has publicly apologized for airing a report on international students that has been called racist and inaccurate.

The apology came Sunday five months after the airing of a W5 program, "The Campus Giveaway", which alleged that foreign students were squeezing Canadian students out of university programs.

The report showed a film of students of Chinese descent on campus while a voice dubbing said Canadian students were being denied access to certain professional faculties. A viewing of the footage by members of the Ad Hoc Committee Against W5 found that of those shown, only two were actually foreign students.

The apology, read at the beginning of W5's Sunday broadcast, also said that another program will be aired at a later date that will "let all sides have their say" on the international student situation.

John Hellmwell, Director of the Canadian Bureau for International Education (CBIE), said that if the CTV carries through with their promises, those fighting the program will be satisfied.

"I consider it a major victory," said Hellmwell. "I'm delighted with it."

W5's apology admitted that it incorrectly reported that there are 100,000 foreign students in Canadian schools. The program lumped international student numbers with those of landed immigrants and students in Canada on special permits.

According to the Department of Immigration, there are 58,000 international students at all levels, including high schools, community colleges and universities.

W5 also apologized for what members of Canada's Chinese community have called its racist overtones.

"It was never our intention in doing the program to give offense to any Canadian community: W5 sincerely regrets any offense that may have been unintentionally given to the Chinese-Canadian community."

In addition to a protest by 2,000 people outside CTV headquarters in Toronto last month, and other actions in various Canadian cities, several libel suits were filed against the network. It is not yet known if the suits will continue.

33 campus groups pledge support for South Africa divestment

by Rosemary Oliver

While the Board of Governors ponders the possibility of divestment, support is growing for the South Africa Committee's (SAC) demand that the university divest itself of its holdings in companies that deal with South Africa.

Monday afternoon the executive of SAC presented a brief to the Board's Committee on Moral Responsibility of Investments detailing their reasons for the call for divestment. They also showed the film, "Last Grave at Dimbaza", which described the apartheid regime operating in South Africa.

"The committee members joined us in our condemnation of apartheid," said Barbara Jenkins, an SAC member president at the meeting.

"What they're debating is whether divestment is an effective way to do something in South Africa."

Jenkins said the same issue had been discussed by SAC in October, and they had concluded divestment was effective, based on the advice of African leaders and groups.

Thirty-three social groups and clubs on campus have officially given their support to the divestment demand and more than 3,100 signatures have been collected on the divestment petition.

Last week, Students' Council approved a motion to assume the responsibility for administering their own reserve fund. The money is currently being handled by the university administration. The motion stipulates the money be placed in institutions which do not deal with South Africa.

Students at Macdonald campus in Ste. Anne-de-Belleue are also getting involved. Members of SAC visited the campus earlier this week. They collected some 100 signatures for the petition and met with the secretary of the International Students Association at Macdonald, who is leading the call for divestment there.

SAC chairperson, Rick Boudreau said he welcomes the involvement of Macdonald students.

"I think we should expand our support across the university. It's important to get Macdonald students involved in the mainstream of McGill life."

After 10 years of an expanding feminist consciousness sex roles are no longer clearly defined. The old stereotypes are breaking down. But what are we to replace them with, and what sort of individuals will our children aspire to be? Those are the sort of questions that will be addressed this weekend during the Planning for a Non-sexist Society conference. Participants from universities, governments, unions and community groups will deliver papers and speak on panels. The conference begins Thursday. For information call: 392-8920 or 392-4250.

National identity too costly

by Richard Goldman and Joanne Nezes

The Parti Québécois' approach to the Quebec-Canada conflict is creating a schism in Quebec society, according to the participants in a panel discussion held by the "No" committee yesterday.

Liberal backbencher Warren Allmand presided over the panel, which consisted of professors from four McGill departments. Political science professor Charles Taylor, philosophy professor Storrs McCall, Maurice Pinard of sociology and William Tetley of the law faculty were unanimous in their disapproval of the Parti Québécois' sovereignty-association option and the tactics it is using to promote it.

"Lévesque's argument is that Quebec suffers from a identity split between Québécois and Canadian," said Taylor. "and that the Canadian side of it is a result of fear and intimidation. I am appalled at the cost of the attempt to change the identity of a people, because the only argument you can use to tell someone that they ought to identify themselves as pure Québécois and not Canadian is to appeal to the worst kind of nationalism, to say: that's what it is to be a real Québécois, to set a criterion that those who do not conform are traitors."

McCall agreed that the referendum was an attempt "to create a national identity at too great a cost", and said the PQ was playing the French against the English.

"The PQ says that if the referendum is defeated by a narrow margin, say with 45 per cent voting 'yes', it will be the fault of the anglophones. This is a very unfortunate statement for a premier to make... If only the francophone vote counts, why not use two separate ballot boxes?"

McCall said it was ironic that the PQ was comparing its program to the European Economic Community.

"In Europe, they have realized the advantages of closer integration and may be moving towards a federation such as ours. Here, in Canada, we are talking about creating more barriers between the two partners," he said.

Pinard attacked the legitimacy of the referendum question, saying it was chosen in order to maximize 'Yes' votes without regard for the PQ's ideology or platform. He said that nine consecutive opinion polls held since the beginning of the present government's term, demonstrated Quebecers' disapproval of sovereignty-association, but that in eight of the nine polls a majority favored granting "a mandate to negotiate", the term that will be used in this spring's vote.

Tetley shared Pinard's view of the question and said that the PQ was "appealing to emotions while ignoring the true issues—economic, political and cultural questions." He compared the Lévesque White Paper with the Liberal Beige Paper, praising Claude Ryan's suggestions for constitutional reform, and labelling the White Paper "television promotion".

"The fact that Alberta Premier Lougheed and Ontario Premier Davis stated their approval of the document (Beige Paper) is a very positive sign," said Tetley, adding that if Ryan were elected the next premier he would have to make significant progress in the area of constitutional reform, if he wished to satisfy Quebecers' desire for independence.

Although his presence was widely publicized beforehand, Allmand spoke only briefly during the discussion. He concluded by saying that while the francophones of Quebec were often considered to be in a subordinate position, Quebec's native people have suffered far more as a group.

Laurentian occupation ends

SUDBURY (CUP)—Students at Laurentian University have ended their occupation of university administration offices after president Dr. Henry Best agreed to support several student positions on the quality of education.

Best returned to Sudbury from Toronto to deal with occupation. Following his discussion with student representatives, he released a statement dealing with the issues of student involvement on the university's Board of Governors, tuition levels and the Ontario Student Assistance Plan (OSAP).

In his statement Best assured students that:

- He is prepared to support the principle of voting student representation on the Board of Governors.

- He feels the 7.5 per cent increase in tuition is already too high for students and the implementation of an optional 10 per cent (in whole or in part) could well make the circumstances for some students intolerable.

- He will continue to pressure the Ministry of Colleges and Universities as much as possible for changes in OSAP to better respond to the needs of students.

Although student leaders at Laurentian were happy with the results of the occupation more efforts to focus attention on student concerns will be made in the future, according to students' General Association (representing English speaking students at Laurentian) president Ron McKay.

"It's (the occupation) part of a continuing effort on our part to deal with our Board of Governors and the provincial government meetings with the Board and the mass rally at Queen's Park are examples of what we will be doing in the future," said McKay.

Students boycott classes at University of Ottawa

OTTAWA (CUP)—University of Ottawa students will stage their third mass boycott of classes today to protest tuition fee increases.

More than 1,000 students participated in the last class boycott, held on February 21. And at a general assembly last week more than 500 students pledged support for a student federation plan to boycott the 7.5 per cent fee increase set for next fall.

After the general assembly a group of students failed in an attempt to occupy the university registrar's office. Student protestors occupied the office in a protest last month.

The university administration quashed the attempted occupation with a threat to call in police to remove the students from the building.

Student federation president Anne McGrath said students will be urged to pay only half of their tuition when they register next fall and to withhold the $75 increase when they pay the final instalment in January.

Students at the general assembly said that although the university had decided not to increase fees more than the mandatory 7.5 per cent ordered by the government, they would not accept any increase. Universities were given permission by the Conservative government to increase tuition by up to an additional 10 per cent if they wished.

University of Ottawa students also plan to travel by bus to the Ontario legislature March 27 to join in a province-wide protest against cutbacks and fee increases.

Teaching evaluations affect teaching

The Arts and Science Undergraduate Society (ASUS) teaching evaluations are designed primarily to help students choose courses, but they also have an effect on teaching performance, says evaluations co-ordinator Lisa Moore.

"I think you can see that professors take the evaluations seriously. In the Department of Political Science, professors who were rated rather low have improved over successive evaluations," says Moore.

"The evaluations are publicized so professors are pressured to improve."

The evaluations are done every year in the faculties of Arts and Science. The results are compiled during the summer and made available to students during the registration period. In addition to a statistical breakdown, this year's results will include students' written comments.

More than 70 per cent of the departments in the two faculties are participating in the evaluations this year, a 40 per cent increase from last year.

This term's evaluations will begin Monday and continue all week. Moore says an organizational meeting is being planned for Friday at 3:00, in the Union building and all departments are urged to send delegates.

Wage freeze prescription for high worker expectations

by Harold Koblin

If economic conditions don't improve soon the U.S. government should seriously consider imposing a wage-price freeze, says Lloyd Ulman, a member of President Carter's pay advisory board.

Invited to speak at this year's McDonald-Currie Lecture, Ulman said yesterday that the implementation of wage and price controls may become necessary in the future.

"Carter's policy is being criticized for not doing what it's supposed to do—it's not lowering wage-earners' expectations."

"The attraction of a freeze, in principle, is that it can do something about dousing expectations. The danger is that a freeze accumulates inequalities, which later blow up, giving you an eventual increase in inflation when controls come off," said Ulman.

But, he added, controls might not result in a wage explosion.

"They might not have such a bad effect if the freeze is not regarded as a quick and easy alternative to a painful deflation. Wage and price controls don't do a hell of a lot of good for the economy, but if the government kept a stringent control on inequalities, there wouldn't be a wage explosion after their conclusion," he said.

As part of Carter's Pay Advisory Board, Ulman is currently involved in establishing voluntary wage guidelines in the United States.

"The Carter administration's position is that they are absolutely dead set against controls—one technical reason for this is that Congress would never allow the passage of a controls act."

"Also, they are afraid of a speculative run-off. Even if they were going to impose controls, they wouldn't say so because markets would go crazy in their anticipation. It's like any other economic policy, you lie through your teeth until you impose it in order to prevent economic disorder," said Ulman.

Quebec's Indians, Inuit discuss referendum

Representatives of Quebec's native and Inuit peoples will get a chance to add their perspective to the referendum debate tomorrow.

The McGill Referendum Committee and the Political Science Students Association are co-sponsoring a panel discussion titled "The Québec Referendum and Its Impact on Native Peoples".

Panelists include Chief Andrew T. Delisle from Caughnawaga; David Nalakti, Director of the Board of the Co-op Federation and a representative of Quebec native women.

Discussion will centre on the relative merits of Quebec sovereignty, in light of native land claims, perspectives and rights.

The event is being held in the union ballroom at 4:00 p.m. tomorrow. Organizers say the discussion will be broadcast on CBC radio.

Letters

Ryan Verbolalia
boring

To the Daily:

On Friday last I had the distinct pleasure of attending Mr. Ryan's speech and I thought I might offer some of my observations about the event.

From the onset I would like it to be known that I found the event embarrassingly insulting to the McGill student body's intelligence and one of the most blatant displays of political opportunism I have every bore witness to.

The event began with a lengthy and plethoric introduction of Mr. Ryan by one of his junior associates. Even at this early stage the event adopted an insulting tone. Insulting, insofar as the organizers of the event attempted to disguise cheap, political swashbuckling and back-slapping as an informative and appreciated biography of Mr. Ryan's career.

Following this was a further presentation of Mr. Ryan by the moderator of the ensuing question and answer period. Although the individual is a political science professor at McGill and therefore should have some concept about the role of moderator he chose to make it abundantly clear that his political sentiments lay with Mr. Ryan. In doing so the individual renounced his impartiality, which clearly is the fundamental principle involved with the job, and lent further credence to the already growing suspicion that the event was to be a veritable farce.

Then came Mr. Ryan's short, in length and content, speech which I had expected would drive the audience to the microphones. Needless to say this did not happen. Rather, the simplistic nature of the speech coupled with the orator's prosaic monotone sufficed to leave the audience in a stupor of boredom.

Next came the question period where I must concede we as a student body did not win any points for generating enthusiasm, however Mr. Ryan's responses fared even worse. He effectively displayed his talent to talk and talk and talk until he left the listeners lethargic. It wasn't until the last question that it dawned on me what a sham the whole thing really was, and was intended to be.

The final question was posed by a man seemingly propounding a Marxist-Leninist interpretation (and to that man I hope that I am not myself being insultingly simplistic). It was not the content of the question but the strong, forceful delivery that woke up a few people in attendance and drew sporadic applause, which for the first time that afternoon was not initiated by the strategically placed Liberal "crowd coaxers". Although the questioner came dangerously close to being unacceptably rude, he correctly would not allow Ryan to enter into one of his now familiar vapid replies. Eventually the man was pushed from the microphone by a 'young Liberal bootlicker' who obviously felt the indoctrinated need to protect his mentor from the welcomed barrage. At this point I assessed the mood of the crowd and was decidedly disappointed. The mood was that Mr. Ryan was 'god-like' and that everyone had to show so much restraint and respect as to render ourselves embryonic.

In a 'postmortem' of the event with a friend we arrived at some further realizations. First of all that Claude Ryan did not come to speak to the McGill students. Instead he came to us because this kind of event draws the media coverage that he must strive for.

Second, these events, with question and answer periods, are not at all designed to provide the public with direct answers to direct questions. The longwinded, wearisome and arid replies coupled with the fact that by the time one gets to pose a question the debate has long since shifted emphasis, serves to pacify and stupefy audiences. The justification for this is that this type of organization is warranted for order to be maintained. However when that order is so rigidly maintained so as to work to the advantage of the speaker and to the disadvantage of the questioners then the whole thing stinks of the political opportunism that it essentially is. If this then is the case our continued attendance at these 'media events' only serves to provide an incentive for this opportunism to continue.

Fascism Implied by Bill 101

To the Daily:

The letter written by Denis Périard (Mon. Mar. 17) typifies the anti-English racism present in his thinking and in that of many of the referendum supporters. I deeply resent the attitude portrayed by Mr. Périard that I as an "Anglophone" am collectively guilty of being anti-French because the Students' Society has not accorded him the same privileges as the "no" group in setting up information tables in the Union Building. If Mr. Périard has a bone to pick with the Students' Society, pick it with the Students' Society and do not write letters with the words "Dear Anglophone": I'd like to know why, if you want equality, you do all you can to make life difficult to 'Francophones' on their right of expression."

To further educate Mr. Périard about rights of expression I hope that he is aware that Quebec is the only province which has made it an offence for people to express themselves in public in their own language. If he is not aware I am talking about Bill 101 which denies the English speaking people of this province (of which there are almost 1 million) their basic human right to use English in the public domain i.e. advertising, conducting business affairs, in municipal government, in the courts and in having a change or remove all English place names. This is backed up by fines ranging into the thousands of dollars and in the case of businesses, permits can be taken away depriving a citizen of his right to earn a living.

Also I doubt very much that Mr. Périard has to submit to the indignity of a government sending blue and white slips to English families identifying them and any of their potential descendants as "Anglophones". But note, that if that "Anglophone" does not register with the Office de la Langue Française, he loses that right to be an "Anglophone". I always thought Mr. Périard, that rights are RIGHTS and could not be traded around as if we were dealing in stocks.

When Mr. Lévesque gets up in the National Assembly and attacks the "Anglo Establishment" (whatever that is, maybe the English bogeyman) or insinuates that Quebecers may "naturally but wrongly" feel antagonistic towards the English population if the Referendum is lost I take great heart in your statement about Sovereignty-Association:

"This would give the possibility of French, English, Italian, etc., people to live together practically and not only theoretically with the same rights and possibility."

WAKE UP, the issue in this referendum is not parties and language. It is whether Canadians and Quebecers want an intolerant society as typified by you or a tolerant one. I fear the former.

Eric Boll
Engineering student

To the Daily:

Before the session ends, please let me thank you and your staff for a most interesting and informative year of Dailies. The subject issues were great, especially the Science and Urban Affairs ones. I very much appreciate the weekly French issue and I think you did a good job in trying to keep people informed about issues and events. The working stiffs get very little information about anything around here, so your efforts are that much more important for letting us know what is going on. I do hope the Daily can stay that way and that next year's staff can keep up the momentum. Good luck and thanks again.

Catch vingt-deux

To the Daily:

Mr. Ryan,
At McGill, it wasn't enough for you to support your party using Robert Bourassa's racketeering games with private corporations, you even tried to increase your support here by bringing back the linguistic debate as it was prior to Bill 22, without any consideration for the social unrest that this would cause. Not only has your thirst for power made you deny the need for a special status for Quebec (you openly defended that in Le Devoir), but it has also driven you so far as to claim bilingualism for Quebec united with a unilingual English Canada: "d'égal à égal?"

For the sake of power, you are even denying the verdict of the referendum if it's not at least 70% Yes and 30% No. This means that it would take, to gain your respect, two-thirds of the population supporting changes to balance the other third for status quo (call it "beige", if you wish). This means that my Yes vote and another's Yes, together, are equal to one No vote (2 Yes votes equal one No vote): "d'égal à égal?"

Are you so obsessed with power, Mr. Ryan, that you reject the fundamental principle continued on page 7

ple of our democracy: one elector equals one vote, regardless of political affiliations?

You also fully realize that the unanimous support of all eleven Canadian governments, is needed to achieve any constitutional reform in this federation. Even by giving up Quebec's traditional demands, you cannot have any consensus among the other Canadian provinces about your "Beige Paper". And even on the eve of the referendum (when such support would do miracles for the No option!), the Federal government is far from being ready to give any power to the provinces. Thus, it must be clear, even to your power-driven mind, that we are bound to wait forever, before any constitutional unanimity would ever become realized. Your claim, therefore, is just another way to gain time for the status quo, hoping that the people will get tired and turn away from the national debate.

You should at least be defending Quebecers' democratic values, and admit that a massive No at the referendum would bring Quebec "égal à égal" with New Brunswick.

If you didn't leave Le Devoir to satisfy your political ambitions, you would still be defending Quebec's need for democratic and constitutional equality. You would then have been ideologically free to acknowledge that the only way Quebec could ever have that special status (you were claiming as essential) is to support our government's request for a mandate to negotiate a New Deal with maximum negotiating powers: "égal à égal"!

Your past commitments to constitutional and political realities should not be forgotten, for this blind race toward power you were thrown into, Mr. Ryan!

Jean Crevier, former president du Rassemblement du Peuple Québécois à McGill

P.S. By the way, Mr. Ryan, store signs in Côte-St-Luc and NDG are still mostly in English.

As with the muskox,
so with the Jews

To the Daily:

In response to Mr. Lopes letter:

Your criticism of Israel's policy with respect to citizenship betrays a lack of understanding of the reasons for which Israel was formed.

After centuries of persecution Jews decided to create in the land of their forefathers a permanent refuge for Jews. A place that will extend them permanent welcome, a place where they can hold their head up without being the target of insult and injury. For Israel to turn away a Jew would be to deny the very essence of that state's existence.

I find your judgement pertaining to the return of the Palestinian you were referring to slightly (you notice my partiality to euphemism) irrational. If this Palestinian was driven out by Jews then he must now hate the very sight of one and so can hardly be considered an ideal citizen of a state of Jews. It is however, more likely that this Palestinian ignored the invitation to remain extended by the State of Israel, preferring to follow the advice of his leaders, who expected to leave and return conquerors after having pushed the Jews into the sea. They failed and now expect to be pitied for their own folly. They made their bed with a clear knowledge of what they were doing and should now lie in it as best they can.

As for the amorphous accusations that are constantly made against the State of Israel, I have yet to see them clearly stated and substantiated with proof by those who make them.
